Pittsburgh synagogue victims include 97-year-old, brothers

New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio blasted the president's claim that armed guards might have prevented Saturday's massacre.

Following the killing of 11 worshippers at a Pittsburgh synagogue on Saturday, New York Gov. Andrew Cuomo and New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio directed state police and the NYPD to increase patrols around Jewish centers and houses of worship across New York state.

"We, as a nation, must stand together and stand against the corrosive and destructive forces of hate in all of its forms," said Cuomo in a statement.

"The New York family grieves for those who were killed and prays for those who were injured in this heinous and horrific mass shooting at the Tree of Life Synagogue in Pittsburgh," said Cuomo. "And we stand together with the Jewish community in this difficult time as we always have before."

De Blasio expressed disdain for President's Trump's suggestion that if the synagogue had had an armed guard, the loss of life would've been more limited. "Let's be clear," de Blasio tweeted on Sunday, "suggesting a house of worship should have had armed guards is blaming the victims, and that's not America. That's not our values."

The suspected gunman, 46-year-old Robert Bowers of Pittsburgh, stormed the building during a Saturday morning service. He also wounded six others including four police officers before being arrested.

Bowers, who has made anti-Semitic posts online and, during the attack, shouted about killing Jewish people, has been charged with federal hate crimes and could face the death penalty. He will appear before a judge on Monday afternoon, U.S. Attorney Scott Brady said at a news conference.

"The fact that this attack took place during a worship service makes it even more heinous," Brady said.

The Tree of Life Synagogue in the city's Squirrel Hill neighborhood, a heavily Jewish area, was holding a Shabbat religious service when the gunman burst in.

Five of the victims lived in Squirrel Hill and the rest were from other Pittsburgh neighborhoods and communities surrounding the city.

The mass shooting prompted security alerts at houses of worship around the country and condemnation from politicians and religious leaders.

It followed a spate of pipe bombs found mailed in recent days to prominent political figures, mostly Democrats including former President Barack Obama, ahead of Nov. 6 congressional elections.

"We'll get through this darkest day of Pittsburgh history by working together," the city's mayor, Bill Peduto, told reporters.

David and Cecil Rosenthal, 54- and 59-year-old brothers; Sylvan Simon, 86, and his wife Bernice Simon, 84; Joyce Fienberg, 75; Richard Gottfried, 65; Jerry Rabinowitz, 66; Daniel Stein, 71; Melvin Wax, 88; and Irving Younger, 69, were killed, according to officials.

The oldest victim was Rose Mallinger, 97, of Squirrel Hill. REUTERS

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

MAIT BURKE, SPORTS EDITOR

Five years ago, when the Red Sox last won it all, I remember preaching to Boston fans to not take all the winning for granted. Since then, the Patriots have won two Super Bowls and the Red Sox just won it all again last night. So, maybe we should take this winning for granted. Maybe winning championships is Boston's birthright in the 21st century. The Celtics, Red Sox and Bruins are young and immensely talented. The Patriots are still excellent. Another title is likely coming soon in the next few years. So live it up, Boston. Enjoy this one. And the next one, and the next one. Why can't we be great forever? For more, go to metro.boston.us.

2 WINNERS IN $688M POWERBALL JACKPOT

2 Are you a newly minted millionaire? The winning numbers for the estimated $687.8 million Powerball jackpot, the fourth largest in the lottery's history, were drawn Saturday night. The numbers are 8, 12, 13, 19, 27 and Powerball of 04. Two winning tickets were announced early Sunday, one sold in Iowa and a second in New York. No winners immediately stepped forward. More winning tickets could be announced as results come in overnight. This is the second astronomical lottery draw this week, with the $1.537 billion Mega Millions lottery drawn on Tuesday with one winning ticket sold in South Carolina. The winner or winners of the Mega Millions $2 ticket have not yet stepped forward publicly. The prize is just shy of the world record. The winners of Saturday's Powerball will have the option of sharing an immediate cash payment of $198.1 million each, sharing the $687.8 million prize paid out over 29 years, or a separate combination of the jackpot, according to the lottery. The lottery was previously estimated at $750, but the adjusted numbers early on Sunday are based on actual ticket sales, the lottery announced.

LEICESTER CITY OWNER KILLED IN COPTER CRASH

3 Leicester City soccer club owner Vichai Srivaddhanaprabha, a Thai tycoon, was killed along with four others when his helicopter crashed and then exploded after a Premier League match on Saturday, the soccer club and police said. Vichai bought the unheralded central England side in 2010 and went on to stun the soccer world by beating odds of 5,000-1 to win the Premier League title in 2016 in what amounted to a sporting fairy tale. "It is with the deepest regret and a collective broken heart that we confirm our chairman, Vichai Srivaddhanaprabha, was among those to have tragically lost their lives on Saturday evening when a helicopter carrying him and four other people crashed outside King Power Stadium," a club statement said on Sunday.

Mass. ballot Question 3 puts transgender rights on national stage

Question 3 has reached beyond state boundaries as a national conversation about transgender rights unfolds.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Massachusetts ballot Question 3 is gaining attention beyond the Bay State as the Trump administration considers redefining legal definitions of sex and gender, threatening transgender protections across the country.

Question 3 asks residents to uphold a transgender protection law that was signed by Gov. Charlie Baker in July 2016, which bars discrimination on the basis of gender identity in places of "public accommodation," from bathrooms to restaurants to parks.

The question has taken on national interest, with actress Laverne Cox voicing her support for a "yes" vote at an event this week by saying that Massachusetts "has an opportunity to send a message to the rest of the country that this is not who we are as Americans, that this is not who we are as human beings, that we respect the humanity of everyone."

Supporters of Yes on 3 joined a Boston Common rally on Sunday to stand up against threats to transgender rights from across the country.

"I think there are more eyes on Massachusetts and more people understanding the importance of voting 'yes' on 3 because they understand that the decisions that we make as a commonwealth reverberate across the country," said Carol Rose, executive director of the ACLU of Massachusetts.

"And it's tremendously important on this issue that we are voting our values and not our fear."

A "yes" vote on Question 3 keeps the existing public accommodation law in place. A "no" vote would repeal the transgender protection law — a move that both sides say would echo across the country.

This is why Mason Dunn, Yes on 3 campaign co-chair, knew this ballot question would have national implications from the very beginning, regardless of the current national climate around transgender identity.

"It's tremendously important on this issue that we are voting our values and not our fear."

"The opponents to transgender equality, the anti-LGBTQ advocates, have stated from the beginning that if they can be successful in Massachusetts, they'll make the effort to roll back transgender rights in any state they can across the country," said Dunn. "What's at stake here is the very fact that if they're successful here, it could mean the end of transgender rights in many states where [transgender people] may be more vulnerable than in Massachusetts."

Keep MA Safe and the Massachusetts Family Institute are the groups pushing a "no" vote on Massachusetts ballot Question 3, claiming that the law makes women and children less safe by putting them at risk of sexual predators.

Melissa James Gibson and Frank Pugliese discuss the ups and downs of Claire Underwood's turn in the White House.

letters@metro.us

At the very end of "House of Cards" season 5, disgraced former President Frank Underwood (Kevin Spacey) calls his successor and wife, President Claire Underwood (Robin Wright), from his Washington D.C. hotel room. Instead of answering she ignores her husband's call, turns to the camera and says, "My turn."

According to showrunners Melissa James Gibson and Frank Pugliese, it was this pivotal turn in the story — and not Spacey's firing from the show after sexual misconduct allegations against him were made public — that informed everything that will happen in the upcoming season 6, which debuts on Netflix Friday, Nov. 2.

"This whole story was set in motion when a man was passed over for power," Gibson tells Metro. "It's about what got unleashed as a result, and all the things that occurred as a result of that. It all spiraled out of control and ended up involving a lot of people."

"Is this world or this country, both the real ones and those in the world of the show, ready for a female president?" Gibson goes on to ask. Pugliese happens to agree and ponders whether "the powers that be in this country and elsewhere [will] ever let a woman have power."

"The show began with a man being passed over, but the question now is, will they let a woman have it?" he continues, while adding that, in the duplicitous and dangerous world of Netflix's "House of Cards," that doesn't necessarily mean that Claire is a character without sin. "There's no one woman. I mean, a woman in power is not just one thing. We have a number of characters on the show that exhibit this."

"Besides," adds Pugliese, "it would have been weird for Claire to succeed without using the rules of the show. She's using the rules first established by Beau Willimon, the original British adaptation and the Michael Dobbs novel it's all based on. That's what makes her a success, in our eyes."

And that, the showrunners contend, is where the real meat of the final season of "House of Cards" resides. President Claire Underwood must overcome not only the long shadow cast by her publicly disgraced husband, but the equally shadowy endeavors of her few remaining allies and the many enemies who lie in waiting and are ready to pounce. So there's obviously going to be a lot of nostalgia in season 6 for all of the longtime viewers, because some of the series' most deeply buried skeletons are about to resurface with a vengeance.

"We just wanted to end the story properly and with integrity," Gibson concludes. "We wanted to bring it to a brave, surprising and inevitable close. We wanted to play off all the promises that were made before, of course, but also give the fans a satisfying ride along the way."

The sixth and final season of "House of Cards" streams Friday on Netflix.

Abby Epstein talks us through her illuminating documentary "Weed the People."

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

Even though it has slowly become more acceptable as it has been legalized across America, the use of weed recreationally can still be a divisive subject.

That might change, though, if the benefits and medicinal effects of the drug were revealed. "Weed the People" exposes just that, as the documentary follows five families and their cancer-stricken children as they're treated with marijuana, which achieves some astonishing results.

Metro spoke with its director, Abby Epstein, who admits that she was originally attracted to the project because the research that proved using cannabis to help cure cancer was just so "compelling."

"There was a lot of anecdotal research," says Epstein. "Not the kind of Facebook anecdotes. But real anecdotal evidence that I got from talking to actual cancer doctors and oncologists that had seen amazing results with patients. The research was pretty conclusive about what happens, at least in the test tubes.

"I remember seeing Sophie, the little baby in the documentary, when she started on her cancer regimen for the first three months, then did her scan, I was like, 'Oh my God! The tumor will just be gone.' And of course it wasn't, it was bigger. But you had no idea," she adds. "All you knew is that it couldn't hurt the children. It was like doing acupuncture. That was comforting. We knew that it wouldn't hurt and that they didn't have much better options, so it was amazing when there were good results, because it was proving that what was going on with the research could happen."

After seeing the benefits, impact and medical miracles that using weed on children with cancer can have, Epstein insists it is a crime that the drug is still prohibited.

"I think it is a crime and criminal that cannabis isn't accessible to every single person that has cancer," says Epstein. "I think it is a human rights issue. I just don't understand. Someone with Stage 4 cancer, they're not going to wait 17 years for drug trials."

"This is a very, very medicinal substance in this country and around the world that we have been brainwashed to believe is this dangerous narcotic, with no medical benefit. And it is a sham," she adds. "For us, we chose children with cancer because we thought it was the most dramatic, in terms of showing the mistake and trying to change people's pre-conceived notions that this was about someone on chemotherapy trying to smoke a joint to stop their nausea."

We spoke with the filmmaker about her travels into Trump's America.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Journalist and documentarian Alexandra Pelosi may have a harder time than many of us breaking out of her designated political corner. As the daughter of Nancy Pelosi, the long-running and influential Democratic minority leader of the House of Representatives, people may have preconceptions about her in our intensely divided political climate. But as a journalist, Pelosi has tried to navigate how the media coverage of politics has divided us into political tribes. Her 2004 HBO documentary, "Diary of a Political Tourist," aimed to cut through the pageantry and team-sport mentality that modern American politics has turned into.

With her new documentary "Outside The Bubble: On the Road with Alexandra Pelosi," premiering on HBO tonight, Pelosi takes the viewer, as well as her two young sons, on a road trip into these red states to get a better understanding of who Trump's America really is. Pelosi believes that it is extremely important to break the cycle of demonizing people who affiliate themselves with opposing political ideologies as "others," and found that it was extremely important to expose her children to people living outside of their perfectly maintained liberal bubbles.

"I have two middle-school kids. They come home from school reciting 'liberal propaganda' and I wanted to show them the real America," explains Pelosi. "So, I packed my bags and put them in the car and drove them to see some of the hot spots in America where the divide is profound to try to expose them to a different reality. Because, I don't buy the tribal narrative of 'us vs. them'... Cable news feeds us 'red vs. blue' and I believe America is much more purple than that."

In the documentary, Pelosi and her children travel to hot-button places such as hurricane-ravaged Houston, Texas; Charlottesville, Virginia; and meets with security officials to discuss the need for Trump's wall along the U.S. and Mexican border. Through their journeys, Pelosi and her children are exposed to different perspectives on some of today's most dividing issues by focusing on the people of these areas rather than just the hashtag.

While she still does not agree with the politics of many of the different people she met along the way, Pelosi believes that the best way to break free from the bubble is to turn off your television and actually talk to your fellow Americans.

"My biggest complaint about cable news today is that it feeds us what we want to hear and it doesn't respect our intelligence enough to say, 'You know, there could also be another side?'" says Pelosi. "I don't think it's healthy that such educated people live on such a steady diet of everything that they want to hear."

SOX BRING IT HOME AGAIN!

The Red Sox clinch their fourth World Series title this century.

matthew.burke@metro.us

The Red Sox entered October with a million question marks regarding their ability to perform well under playoff pressure. Turns out it was no sweat.

The Sox shredded the Yankees in four games, the Astros in five, and polished off the Dodgers in the World Series in five games as well. A 5-1 victory over L.A. Sunday night ignited a citywide celebration as the Red Sox are champions of the world once more.

David Price proved to be the John Lackey of this edition of a Red Sox championship, flipping the script on his often-rocky Boston career. Price went from bum to legend in the span of a couple of weeks as he allowed just three earned runs total in four appearances dating back to Game 5 of the ALCS.

On Sunday night, Price turned in his masterpiece. The lefty worked a full seven innings, allowing just three hits and one earned run on 89 pitches. He struck out five, walking just two.

Price wasn't the only Sox pitcher on point in Game 5 as Joe Kelly struck out the side in the eighth inning. Chris Sale closed things out.

Offensively, Steve Pearce once again led the way for the Sox as he had a pair of home runs, one coming in the first inning and another in the eighth. J.D. Martinez also had a solo homer in the seventh.

Mookie Betts finally displayed his MVP prowess in the playoffs as he took Clayton Kershaw deep in the top of the sixth inning with a solo homer. Betts' clout put the Sox up, 3-1. It was Betts' first home run since Sept. 24 against Baltimore.

It wasn't all smooth sailing for the Sox on Sunday as Martinez lost the ball in the Dodger Stadium lights in the third inning as the Dodgers threatened. But Martinez's gaffe ultimately didn't cost the Sox as Price bailed them out of the inning.

The 2018 Red Sox title was the 11th Boston sports championship since 2002 as the Patriots have won five, the Sox have won four, and the Celtics and Bruins have one each in that span.

The Red Sox's last World Series championship, in 2013, came with a Game 6 victory at Fenway over the Cardinals. Their previous two titles this century, in 2004 and 2007, came on the road like the one on Sunday night.

The Red Sox went 11-3 in the playoffs, downing two 100-win teams in the process in the Yankees and Astros.

JBj has come through when it matters

Bradley Jr. has gotten it done at the plate in October.

matthew.burke@metro.us

Jackie Bradley Jr. will never be confused with Ken Griffey Jr. as a great all-around center fielder. He's got the defense down pat for sure, but his offensive production has long been less than desirable.

JBj hit just .234 this season, and in his best offensive season ever (2016) he had just a .267 batting average. Even in this postseason, Bradley Jr.'s average is just .200.

But Bradley Jr. has made every single hit he's had this October count.

The 28-year-old, who won a ring with the Sox in his first MLB season in 2013, was the MVP of the ALCS this year when he came up with nine RBI against the defending champion Astros. Overshadowed by the heroics of Nathan Eo-valdi in the Sox's Game 3 marathon loss to the Dodgers in the World Series Friday night was Bradley Jr.'s game-tying home run in the top of the eighth inning at Dodger Stadium. It was yet another two-out hit for Bradley Jr. and the Sox and it came off of Kenley Jansen, one of the top relievers in baseball. Bradley Jr. has clearly earned the trust of manager Alex Cora, who started the Virginia native over Andrew Benintendi in Game 3.

Cora wanted Bradley Jr. and several other young Sox players to show more emotion this postseason, and Sox fans have seen it as the center fielder's smile and "hip-shimmy" has been on display.

"I was like, hey man, you guys are good. You should play the part," Cora said. "And I think we show emotion [now].

They've got that thing, whatever they do when they hit doubles. That hip thing. They're great kids. They're awesome. Very humble. But I think people should know who they really are with the way they act on the field. Like Mookie [Betts], I talk about him smiling, and Jackie — who is very quiet — the other day, he hit that double and he celebrated, finally. And that's what it's all about. This is October."

Bradley Jr. saw his batting average fall to a paltry .161 in May but finished the regular season strong. It set up this postseason run that will be remembered for the rest of his playing days in Boston.

"It's all him," Cora said. "Because at this level, when you're hitting .180 after two months, three months, it's hard. He kept showing up. He kept working. He kept working his craft. Now you see the results. I'm happy for Jackie. It was a struggle early in the season but he's been very consistent at the end."
